The Global City Indicators Program (GCIP) is a decentralized, city-led initiative that enables cities to measure, report, and improve their performance and quality of life, facilitate capacity building, and share best practices through an easy-to-use web portal.

ANNEX O The Global City Indicators Program - World Bank

As the global economy has become more integrated and urbanized, fueled in large part by technology, major cities and metropolitan areas have become key engines of economic growth. The 123 largest metro areas in the world generate nearly one third of global output with only 13 percent of the world's population.
