Statistical fraud detection methods may be supervised™ or unsupervised™. In supervised methods, samples of both fraudulent and non-fraudulent records are used to construct models which allow one to assign new observations into one of the two classes. Of course, this requires one to be confident about the true classes

Statistical fraud detection methods may be supervised™ or unsupervised™. In supervised methods, models are trained to discriminate between fraudulent and non-fraudulent behaviour, so that new observations can be assigned to classes so as to optimise some measure of classification performance.
